A well-travelled fly fisherman discovers you can go home again, and with surprising results.

Curtis Cushman has returned home to Spruce Harbor, Maine, after seeing an intriguing real estate ad in the local paper. He still subscribed to the Knox County News despite having moved away from the coastal village years ago. The listing for Saltwater Farm grabbed him instantly, and emotionally. A small, plain-looking classic farmhouse on ten acres. Buying another house was the last thing Curtis needed. But it was his grandfather's house, and he knew it, and the trout streams cutting through the property, from his childhood.

In this debut novel from Brad Burns, author of the upcoming Montauk to Maine: A Striped Bass Journey, crafts an exquisite short story about life, family, fly-fishing, and so much more. Burns is a native Mainer and accomplished and well-known fly-fisherman, so he's wading thru a subject he is passionate about. A wonderful new project from the author of Closing the Season, On the Cains, and the L.L. Bean Fly Fishing for Striped Bass Handbook.

“In this book a well-travelled fly fisherman discovers that what he is looking for is closer to home than he had realized. This is a gentle, evocative journey set on the coast of Down East Maine. Burns’s prose transports the reader to a simpler place and time. While reading this lovely book, I could see the open pastures and spruce groves of my childhood adventures on Calf Island and North Haven. Anyone who appreciates the coast of Maine will love this book.”—Frederick Thurber, author of In the Wake of the Willows

“Through the main character’s eyes, we take a journey back across his long life on the Maine coast. We learn about his youth, his friends, his family, his life passions and pursuits. It is a fascinating story and a poignant reminder of how the past and the present meld in all of our lives.” —Ed Mitchell, author Fly Rodding the Coast and several other important books on fly fishing
