- Broadcast Yourself
Update your resume on sites like LinkedIn, Monster, Dice and CareerBuilder and let jobs come to you.
- Start Searching
Spend time looking for your perfect job! The more places you look, the more potential opportunities you have.
- Think Outside the Box
Get creative. Don't just apply to jobs, be proactive and reach out to companies you want to work for, even if they don't have a posting.
- Follow Up
Didn't get a returned email or call? Assume your resume got lost in a black hole and follow up. Candidates that follow up get a double take from hiring managers.
- Have Questions
Don't be that person with no questions at the end of an interview. It's ok to write them down and bring with.
- Arrive on Time
Plan your route so you're not late. Pretty self-explanatory.
- Ask References Before
Don't assume a past manager or colleague will give you a good reference; make sure to talk to them before you list their name. One bad reference spoils the bunch.
- Lock up Your Cloud
Last weekend's party resulted in some hilarious photos you just had to share. Unless you want your private data seen by potential hiring managers, make sure your social media settings are on private.
- Do your Research
A great place to find out more about a company is through their YouTube Channel. Watch their videos so you have a talking point during an interview.
- Bring a Resume
Even if you emailed a resume in, make sure to bring a hard copy with.
- Set a Reminder
Even if you have great memory, set an alarm to remind you of upcoming interviews.
- Turn the Cell Off
Leave the cell in the car during an interview or turn it completely off. Nothing is worse than a cellphone blaring in the middle of an interview.

It's likely that if you're a beginner hunter, you won't have a dog when you get out in the field for the first few hours. This is difficult, but not insurmountable.

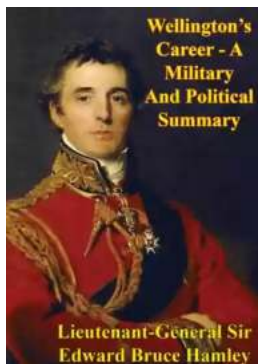

If you don't have dogs, having a large number of hunters might be beneficial. Concentrate on tiny regions that are likely to contain birds. Thickets of cover, tiny stands of trees, or stretches of fencerow between farm fields are all wonderful places to start when establishing a wildlife habitat.

Spread out around 20 yards apart from the other hunters in your party and move in a straight line over these fields to avoid being seen. You want to flush birds that are within shot range, which is less than 40 yards (closer is better).

While birds might flush at any moment, it is especially important to be on the lookout when you near the end of a field and begin to approach natural impediments. Pheasants sometimes prefer to run rather than fly, and as a result, they will frequently flee to the far end of a field and then wait until you are close enough to flush them.

As a result, if you have enough hunters, try placing one of them near the end of the field to act as a barrier. This individual may also be able to obtain shots at birds that flee out of range of the walking hunters.
