Fenton Kelsing is a prominent Florida psychologist who lives with his vivacious wife, Betty, and their two children, Liane and Oran. On the day of his graduation from high school, Oran kills himself.

At the funeral, the minister bespeaks a prophecy that the unshackled soul may yet comfort loved ones with visits never so profoundly felt in life. The words open a channel through which Oran is able to return to visit those he left behind. Each sees him differently, as they saw him in life.

Liane, lashes out at Oran for ruining her 11th birthday party. Angry at those who did not come to the funeral, she makes obscene phone calls to them in a disguised voice.

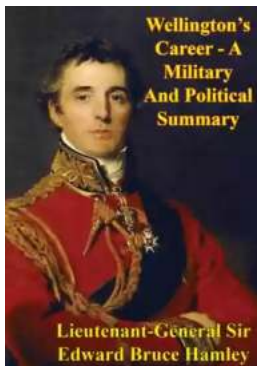

The once vibrant Betty has no reason to dress up or leave the house. During a visit to her, she tells him she knows why he killed himself. It was her fault.

Oran's girlfriend, Nancy, attaches herself to the Kelsings, taking on their pain as self-retribution for not giving herself to Oran shortly before he killed himself., as she had promised. It would have been the first time for each of them.

Fenton is tortured by having put-off talking to Oran just before the graduation party. Oran had approached him, but Fenton had not had time. Guests were arriving. He chastises himself for knowing his patients' troubles, but not his son's.

Ultimately, it is Oran's visits with those he loves that help them to go on with their lives.
