She guided them through the darkest of times, reminding them of their roots and their shared history. Together, they have created a strong support system that upholds their cultural heritage and traditions.

Building Bridges

This book is comprised of two distinct parts that take the reader on a journey from pre-British Mandate Palestine to modern day Palestine. Part I is a narrative memoir of the author's mother, Huda Awad, whose life was a microcosm of the ups and downs of the political drama playing out in Palestine. Huda's courage, resilience and Christian faith were an inspiration to her seven children who watched her overcome personal and national tragedy after the death of her husband in 1948. Part II is a historical account of the Arab-Israeli conflict from the perspective of the author, a Palestinian Christian clergyman. This 12-chapter documentation provides a historical outline and discussion of the Arab-Israeli conflict, complete with colorful maps from the early 1900's to 2012. Additionally, this section zeroes in on secular and Christian Zionism, Palestinian refugees, Jewish settlements, peace plans and initiatives and international law. Essays, case studies and a Q & A section infuse the book with a personal touch and hands on applicability to a topic often difficult to discern.
