Imagine a tree stump, long after it has fallen – lifeless, or so it seems. In truth, this silent sentinel never truly dies. Through the networked roots, neighboring trees can transfer nutrients and offer support to the stump, ensuring its survival. The plant people exhibit a powerful solidarity that transcends individuality.

The Secret Language of Plants: Chemical Conversations

While our vocal cords allow us to express thoughts and feelings through words, plants have developed an eloquent chemical language that surpasses our comprehension. These silent conversations are carried out through the release of pheromones and volatile organic compounds, which convey vital information to other plants and organisms in their vicinity.

For example, when an herbivore begins munching on a leaf, the wounded plant releases chemical signals that warn neighboring plants of the imminent danger. In response, nearby vegetation adapts their chemical composition, making them less appetizing to the herbivores. With these chemical conversations, the plant people can protect themselves and their community from potential harm.

Seeds of Survival: Clever Strategies and Adaptation

The plant people have mastered ingenious techniques to ensure their survival in various environments. From the intelligence of seed dispersal mechanisms to the intricate strategies of mimicking other organisms, plants demonstrate unparalleled adaptability.

Take, for instance, the orchid. This exceptional flower species possesses deceptive adaptations, fooling unsuspecting insects into pollinating them. By resembling the appearance, scent, and even pheromones of female insects, orchids manipulate male insects into aiding their reproduction. Such cunning strategies have enabled plants to thrive in the harshest of environments, adapting to every challenge thrown their way.

Beyond Earthly Abilities: The Extraordinary World of Plant Sensitivity

Plants may lack a nervous system, but that doesn't mean they are insensitive to the world around them. From the mesmerizing movements of the sensitive plant to the ethereal night-time sensitivity of flowers like the evening primrose, plant people exhibit an enigmatic responsiveness to external stimuli.

Additionally, numerous studies have shown that plants can perceive and respond to sound vibrations, including music. These findings suggest that the plant kingdom can experience sensory responses beyond our current comprehension.

The secret world of the plant people is a realm filled with wonders, intelligence, and interconnectedness. From their networked roots to their chemical conversations, these green marvels defy our expectations and ignite our imagination. Exploring the hidden depths of their world encourages us to appreciate and respect the incredible forces of nature unfolding in our own backyards.

Dive into the unknown, embrace the plant people, and unlock the roots of our shared existence.

I had never heard of the 'Plant World', until I met Uncle Twotrees, after a hurricane destroyed my garden center in Kent, England

Plant World exists in another dimension, where everyone, cares for all living things, including, animals, birds, insects, flowers, plants and trees.

Plant people also, communicate with each other, using their minds. This was not the case many centuries ago, when plant people were like humans. They argued, and even fought with each other, from different lands.

Plant world is identical to Mother Earth, except, everything is so much brighter and colorful, especially plants. There is also an exact copy of my 'Old Oak' garden center.

Many, Plant people, can also communicate, with all living things, as they all have, what is called consciousness. It means they know what they are. Why, they are where, they are. They also have a desire to excel in whatever they are doing, just like humans.

This book, is the first of a series of three books. In this book Uncle Twotrees, not only shows me around Plant world. He also introduces me to lots of characters. Many of whom have lived in plant world for centuries, as there is no age limit in Plant World.

As explained, in the following chapters, time is totally different to the human world. Plant people can use their energies to heal plants and animals. Some, such as, Dungo, also visit the human world, but most humans can't see him. Each, plant person has a skill, that they use to help others. There is no money in Plant world.

In the second book, called 'The Secret World of Dream Children'. I started meeting dream children, that arrived in Plant World, this, and the last, century.

Dream children are children that humans mentally think of, or dream about. It could be a newly married couple imagining what their future child will be like. Or, it could be a child dreaming of having a brother or sister, and imagining, what they will do together. It may also, be a child thinking of what they will be like, when they grow up.

Most Dream children arrive with a creative skill that they start using almost straight away.

My third book is called "Dream Animals, Birds, Bees and Plants. It is a collection of stories, about animals, birds, insects, and plants, that I met, and still meeting, in Plant world. As, well as, the owners of pets, and experts who care for living things.

I hope, after reading my books, you also meet characters from the Plant world, in your dreams, and write about them.
