2. The Deck: The standard 52-card deck is used, with the cards ranked from highest to lowest: A, K, Q, J, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2. The trump suit is determined in each round.

3. Dealing: The dealer distributes six cards to each player in a clockwise direction. After that, players go through their hands and bid on the number of points they think they can win during the round.

4. Bidding: The bid consists of two parts: the point bid and the trump bid. The team that wins the bid becomes the declarer, and the opposing team becomes the defense.

5. Gameplay: The declarer leads with any card, and the others follow suit. If a player can't follow suit, they can play a trump card or any other card if they have no trump left. The trick is won by the highest card of the leading suit, unless a trump card is played.

6. Scoring: After all the cards have been played, each team counts the number of points they won according to the bid they made. Points are awarded for high cards, trump cards, and the Jack of trump (also known as the Right Bower). The team that reaches the agreed points threshold first wins the game.

The Gameplay

Playing Pitch card game requires both skillful decision-making and effective communication with your partner. As the declarer, you must carefully calculate the number of points you believe you can win to place your bid.

During gameplay, it is essential to pay attention to the cards played by other players and make strategic decisions based on the information you gather. Trimming your hand to keep high-ranking cards gives you a higher chance of winning tricks and accumulating points.

Moreover, understanding the trump suit and utilizing it strategically can greatly influence the outcome of the game. Managing your trump cards wisely can help you gain an advantage while defending against your opponents.

The Scoring

Scoring in Pitch card game revolves around the points won during each round. The declarer's team will score points based on their bid and the cards they have collected. Remember that a team that fails to achieve their bid will receive negative points.

Each card is assigned a specific point value. For instance, Aces usually count as four points, Kings as three points, Queens as two points, and Jacks as one point. Furthermore, the Right Bower (Jack of trump) is typically worth one additional point.
