The praying mantis, unlike a dog or a cat, is not a typical pet. It does, however, make a one-of-a-kind addition to the home that is both interesting to watch and fascinating to study. Having said that, you do need to take care of your praying mantis in order for it to live a long and healthy life.

A carnivorous insect, the praying mantis. It will eat every 2-3 days, depending on its size and other factors, and it will require a terrarium three times the length of its body.

There are various species of praying mantis, and while some require higher temperatures, the majority can live at room temperature with the addition of humidity to their living environment.
