Preserving History Through Transcription

The art of transcription is an essential endeavor when it comes to capturing the essence and authenticity of old tunes. By studying original recordings and manuscripts, dedicated musicians painstakingly transcribe the melodies note by note, ensuring that every intricacy and nuance is preserved.

Transcribing tunes from the olden times is a labor of love and a crucial aspect of keeping traditional music alive. These transcriptions serve as catalysts, bridging the gap between the past and the present, allowing contemporary musicians to explore and perform these beloved compositions with respect and reverence.

A Journey Through Time

As we delve deeper into the world of tunes from the olden times arranged for the Anglo Concertina, we find ourselves on a musical journey through time. Each melody has its own story, reflecting the culture and emotions prevalent during the era it originated.

From lively tunes that accompanied traditional dances and gatherings to mournful melodies born out of personal struggles and triumphs, these transcribed tunes capture the essence of each historical period. They enable us to not just hear the music but also experience the emotions and stories embedded within each note.

Reimagining the Past

While faithfully transcribing old tunes is an essential aspect, contemporary musicians often add their unique touch to create a fusion of the old and the new. Through innovative arrangements and improvisations, they breathe new life into the melodies, making them resonate with modern audiences.

The Anglo Concertina, with its versatile range and expressive capabilities, allows musicians to infuse their personal style into the tunes while still honoring the roots from which they originated. This blending of past and present creates a captivating musical experience that bridges generations and transcends time.

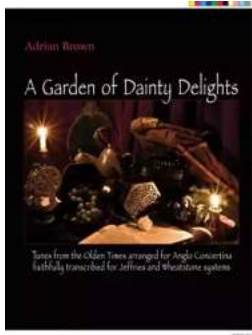

The Joy of Preservation

In a fast-paced world where technological advancements dominate the music industry, the preservation of old tunes is a testament to the enduring power and beauty of traditional music. By faithfully transcribing melodies for the Anglo Concertina, musicians and enthusiasts alike celebrate the cultural heritage and ensure it lives on for future generations to cherish.

Whether you're a seasoned musician or an appreciative listener, tunes from the olden times arranged for the Anglo Concertina offer a glimpse into the past. Each note carries a piece of history, and by engaging with these melodies, we become part of a timeless journey through musical traditions.

So, if you're ready to embark on a magical musical adventure, pick up your Anglo Concertina and explore the tunes from the olden times. Let the music transport you to distant lands, evoke heartfelt emotions, and connect you with the generations that came before.

A delightful selection of popular tunes from the 16th-18th centuries arranged for the Anglo concertina in the harmonic style by concertina virtuoso Adrian Brown. More than 40 tunes are presented with chords and full accompaniment using the same tablature system used by Gary Coover for his tutors and tune collections. The book includes tablature for both the Jeffries and Wheatstone/Lachenal systems of note layout as well as informative notes on the sources and history of the tunes. These are not easy tunes, but learning and playing them, in addition to being great fun, will also dramatically improve your concertina playing skills.
