Her lens captured the essence of Malawi's incredible biodiversity, showcasing its stunning wildlife and unique flora. Every corner of the country seemed to hold a surprise, whether it was encountering elephants at Majete Wildlife Reserve or witnessing an abundance of bird species in Liwonde National Park.

However, Kyung Suk Oh's journey was not just limited to nature's wonders. She delved into the heart of Malawi's vibrant cultures, exploring the traditions and customs that define this nation. From the colorful markets to the lively festivals, she experienced firsthand the richness of Malawi's heritage.

Connecting with Local Communities

One aspect that made Kyung Suk Oh's journey truly memorable was her interaction with the people of Malawi. Their warmth, kindness, and resilience left an indelible mark on her heart. Through her photographs, she aimed to capture the stories and emotions of the individuals she met along the way.

Visiting small villages, Kyung Suk Oh witnessed the daily lives of the locals, gaining a deeper understanding of their challenges, aspirations, and strong sense of community. She was fascinated by their creativity and resourcefulness, particularly their craftwork and traditional practices.

From spending time with fishermen on the shores of Lake Malawi to joining women in their weaving workshops, Kyung Suk Oh forged connections that transcended language barriers. The photographs she took encapsulated the joy, laughter, and resilience she encountered within these communities.

Malawi's Inspirational Spirit

Beyond the stunning landscapes and vibrant cultures, Kyung Suk Oh was captivated by the inspirational spirit that permeates Malawi. Despite facing numerous socio-economic challenges, the people she met were determined to uplift their communities through education, healthcare, and sustainable initiatives.

Whether it was the children studying diligently at a local school or the volunteers working tirelessly in community projects, Kyung Suk Oh witnessed the transformative power of passion and perseverance. In her photographs, she aimed to convey the beauty in the pursuit of a better future.

Capturing Malawi's Essence

Kyung Suk Oh's journey through Malawi transcended the role of a typical tourist. Her photographs and experiences authentically portrayed the soul of the country, offering a glimpse into its untold stories.

Malawi Memories is an account of life in 1967-1971 in Lilongwe, then the capital of the Central Region. It is drawn from the letters written by Humphrey and Anne Taylor to their parents, in England.

Humphrey was appointed Rector of St Peter's Anglican church in Lilongwe. His parish covered a huge area of outstations, churches, schools and political detention centres. Anne taught English and History in the Boys' and Girls' Secondary Schools at Likuni, a R.C. mission station five miles outside Lilongwe and, with a friend, ran a Homecraft class for African women in the Church hall.. St Peter's Rectory was the midpoint of the Diocese, so many people travelling between the north and south, stayed overnight. Eventually, the Diocese agreed to let Humphrey build St Peter's Guest House, which now features in the Rough Guide to Africa.

The book describes the joys of living in such a beautiful country and notes the development of the Taylors' two little daughters, for the benefit of their grandparents in England. It records the Humphrey and Anne Taylor's efforts to serve the disparate communities they found there and the friendships they made with both Africans and Europeans. There are accounts of the tensions of working in post-colonial Africa, with inevitable friction between the races and cultures. Visits to other countries in Central Africa, enabled them to compare their political development with what was happening in Malawi, where President Hastings Banda became ever more despotic.

During their leave in the UK, in 1970, Humphrey did an MA in African Urban Studies at SOAS. They returned to Malawi in December 1971 but nine months later, Humphrey was deported from Malawi on President Banda's orders, because of his involvement with political detainees. The whole family returned to the UK.

However, they retained their love for Malawi and its people and in 2000, Humphrey and Anne were invited to return to take part in the Jubilee celebrations of St Peter's Church. They met old friends, including the Vice President, a former teaching colleague of Anne's, and were able to see how the new democratic government was working as well as to observe the impact of AIDS and the doubling of the population in a country without mineral resources.
